POWELL, OH Presented by National Diversity Council

Leena Madan, Chief Operating Officer of geoAMPS, has been named one of the 2013 Most Powerful and Influential Women of Ohio by the National Diversity Council.

"Leena's contributions to the growth and success of geoAMPS are immeasurable," Yogesh Khandelwal, President and Chief Executive Officer of geoAMPS, said.

Leena and the eight other women selected for the honor will be recognized at the 6th annual Ohio Diversity and Leadership Conference Oct. 24-25 at the Westin Columbus Hotel in downtown Columbus.

"Being chosen to receive this award is a tremendous honor and I sincerely thank the National Diversity Council," Leena said. "It is humbling to stand alongside such an amazingly accomplished group of women."

"I share this award with our wonderful team of dedicated professionals at geoAMPS. Through a collective spirit of innovation, today geoAMPS offers the most comprehensive suite of software products and services in the marketplace."

geoAMPS is a technology company in the Columbus area that is in its third year of operation. In her executive role, Leena is a key decision-maker in the daily operation of the company. Through her leadership, geoAMPS has established itself as the leader in creating software solutions to manage land rights and infrastructure assets. The company is revolutionizing industries by leveraging online, offline and mobile technologies within the land rights, infrastructure assets and data management markets.

The geoAMPS suite of products include altAMPS, designed to provide software solutions for end-to-end management of alternative energy projects; rowAMPS, which allows companies to manage right of way projects and land assets in a real-time, paperless environment; dotAMPS (road) and rxrAMPS (rail), which streamline the process of handling mass transportation projects in a centralized web-based repository; ecoAMPS, which provides the ability to manage all aspects of land reclamation projects; platAMPS, providing centralized web-based tools to manage assignments and all survey-related information; gisAMPS, which provides geographic information system mapping that can be coupled with any of the geoAMPS suite of products; docAMPS, which effectively manages documents, contracts, agreements, document generation and associated revisions; and comAMPS, which provides end-to-end management of telecommunications infrastructure projects.

geoAMPS customers are located in several states. The company has expanded its client base into Canada. Its phenomenal growth is a result of establishing a reputation for high quality products and services.

"Leena's contributions to the growth and success of geoAMPS are immeasurable," Yogesh Khandelwal, President and Chief Executive Officer of geoAMPS, said. "She also is active in the Central Ohio community, giving generously of her time and talents."

"I congratulate Leena on receiving this wonderful award, for which she is most deserving."
